SELFIE

Bosco's life falls apart on the day his father—a corrupt Minister—is sent to prison. Betrayed by friends, left by his girlfriend, expelled from an elitist private university and, finally, evicted from his house, he is forced to share an apartment in a poor neighbourhood. At the same time, he falls in love with an extreme left-wing, blind social worker who is being courted by another left extremist, almost as stupid as Bosco himself. He represents a society of individuals who are incapable of thinking outside their limited worlds.
